

Josh Murray

Josh Murray is a former professional baseball player, financial adviser, and American reality TV star. From 2002 to 2007, he was a shortstop for the Milwaukee Brewers. Athletics definitely run in the Murray family as his brother is a quarterback for the Kansas City Chiefs. Shortly after retiring from baseball, Murray pursued a career in finance.

Despite his success in baseball and finance, Murray ultimately made his climb to stardom as a cast member on season 10 of The Bachelorette, where he gained the heart of Andi Dorfman and proposed after eight weeks. Dorfman accepted the proposal, but their celebrity relationship ended after nine months together due to irreconcilable differences. Dorfman claims she was insecure in her relationship with Murray and that he was verbally abusive. Murray has denied all allegations. However, his relationship status has once again made celebrity news with his recent appearance on the E! reality TV show, Famously Single. On the show, Murray discusses his failed celebrity relationships with relationship experts who are assigned to coach each of the celebrities on their path to love. Hopefully, Murray has learned from his mistakes and won't go back to his old ways when we watch him on the next season of The Bachelor in Paradise.