"Jealousy, often accompanied by blame and control, is a major red flag of a bad relationship and possibly abuse. Early warnings signs include a partner who gets angry when you go out with your friends, talk to someone of the opposite sex, or spend time with your family," says Lori Bizzoco, relationship expert and executive editor of Cupid's Pulse.

"If your partner questions your intentions, doesn't believe your words, or does the unthinkable and snoops through your text messages or online accounts, these are all tell-tale signs that they do not trust you. Invasion of privacy feels extremely violating, even if you've done nothing wrong. If your partner feels like they have to spy on you, then it's probably time to move on," Bizzoco says.
