Celebrity loves Riley Keough and Ben Smith-Peterson have celebrity wedding but delay the honeymoon. What are some advantages of taking some time between your honeymoon and wedding?

Cupid’s Advice:

Some things in life are worth the wait, and there are indeed some perks to waiting a little bit before departing on your honeymoon. You get to enjoy some time as husband and wife in the real world, finish planning the vacation and spend time with your loved ones before taking off. It’s like the saying goes, “All good things come to those wait.” Cupid has some tips:

1. Time spent with family: One of the perks of taking some time between your honeymoon and wedding is that you and your new spouse can spend a little time with your family and friends before being whisked away. Sometimes when people leave for their honeymoon right away, they don’t get a chance to talk with their relatives for as long as they’d like. Have a get together with your families, look at wedding pictures and talk about the upcoming trip!

2. Reality sinks in: It will most likely feel like you and your partner are in a fairytale after tying the knot. An added bonus to waiting a little while before departing on your honeymoon is that the reality has time to really sink in. You'll probably need someone to pinch you to believe it's real life, but that's part of the fun. Take the time to enjoy this newlywed status. Yes, you're really husband and wife!

3. Devour the details: When you plan a wedding, there are a million things going on at once. When you're putting together the ceremony and reception, it's difficult to squeeze in the time to plan the honeymoon and all of the necessary details. Take this time now before you take off to plan all of the little details that you couldn't focus on before. Go shopping for your vacation and pick up things you think you'll need. Do some research on where you are going and book reservations for activities. Make the most of it, and pay attention to your special itinerary.
