Cupid's Advice:

After a relationship has been through physical violence, emotional trauma, and overwhelming feelings of insecurity, it can be a rough road back to happiness. If a couple truly wants to recover from a rocky past, there are several methods to get started.

- 1. Get counseling: Find the source of anger, whether it's on your side, your partner's side, or both. Learn how to manage it. Talk with a professional if you can't resolve the problems on your own.
- 2. Regain trust: All successful partnerships have a common thread: belief in each other. If you've lost it, you'll need to build it up again. Remember to keep trust as an ideal to continually strive for in your relationship.
- 3. Recommit to each other: You must be ready to work through your troubles together in order to recreate your happy place. Find common ground for a new starting point, and see where it goes.
