Cupid's Advice:

The protagonist's drive to live free with his family is inspiring. His risk taking and perseverance show a man dedicated to his wife and little girl. With that in mind, here are ways to prioritize your family:

1. Have a set work schedule: It's difficult to prioritize your family when you never see them. By having a set work schedule your family will know that you will reliably be present at certain times of the day. This isn't possible for everyone, but if you can, obtain a consistent schedule with hours aligned with your family's time table.

2. Quality time: Along with a consistent schedule, it might be tempting to poop out at the end of the day. If the couch is calling your name it's still important to make an effort. By all means, lay down and take a nap. But cut the time in half and make room for your loved ones in your day.

3. Be their safety net: While Kinnaman's character's adrenaline junkie risk taking might be sexy on screen it has many negatives in real life. When it comes to adventures it's better to check in with your significant other on their opinion and it's effect on the family. As the patriarch or matriarch of the family you should provide a sense of security.

4. Avoid arguing: Perhaps the hardest advice of all for some. It is perfectly fine to have a disagreement, but don't let that turn into an all out war. When dealing with conflict, treat the members of your family with respect and patience. Eventually things will settle down and compromise will occur.

How do you know when to call it quits on your relationship?

Cupid’s Advice:

Every so often things take a turn (possibly for the worst) in the relationship, and you are left asking yourself if you and your partner should just separate. Although the warning signs are typically loud and clear, you may be blinded by a few other things. Cupid has some ways to help you decide when it is time to call it quits:

1. Tension and arguments: Do not refuse to see the elephant in the room. If you and your significant other just cannot seem to come to common ground and are constantly going back and forth with each other, reevaluate the relationship. Is it worth the daily headaches? This is a question you must ask yourself and your partner.

2. Zero growth: You should be able to recognize improvement in each other and as a couple. Take into mind that you all are in it to provide encouragement and support to one another. If the relationship is stagnant and there is no hope for bettering, consider parting ways.

3. Nonexistent romance: The kind gestures and words have vanished and your partner is not as affectionate as he or she was in the beginning, consider talking to them about it. If they have no valid reason as to why it disappeared all of a sudden or a solution to the problem, it may be time to call it quits.
