Cupid's Advice:

You're dating someone new and you think you're ready to let your loved ones know about it. Who should you tell first? How should you do it? The situation depends on how long you've been dating your honey, but ultimately, the decision is up to you. Cupid has some tips:

1. Family first: The best way to begin telling your loved ones about the new love in your life is by starting with your family first. Before you introduce your partner to your family, make sure they have at least some idea of what is going on and what to expect. No one likes surprises like this one.

2. Close friends: Tell the friends you care about the most about your love life. If you're a private person, there's no need to go any farther than that. When you do tell your close friends, keep the conversation casual and try not to freak out about the situation. You don't want it to be a bigger deal than it already is.

3. Ask your significant other: Ask your partner how he/she thinks the situation should be handled? Maybe they would prefer to meet everyone all at once, or they might not be ready to announce the fact that you two are an item just yet. Whatever you decide to do, make sure your honey is comfortable with it.
