Cupid's Advice:

It is never fun watching your friend suffer through the post break-up blues. Keep reading for relationship advice from Cupid:

1. Create a distraction: After a break-up, most often all we want to do is just mope around in our pajamas. Help your friend by getting out of the house to attend a fun event. Heading over to the movie theater to watch a newly released thriller can be a great way to take your friend's mind off of a break-up.

2. Surprise girl's night: A night in with close girlfriends can help ease the pain. Load up on the junk food, sweets, and if need be, a bottle of wine. Center the night around facials, girl talk, and lots of laughs. Your friend will appreciate you for it.

3. Be there: Being a friend does not always involve being actively caught up in post break-up activities. Lending a shoulder to cry on or an ear to listen could be all the support your friend needs. Try to remember that their healing process is not on your time schedule. Be present and support however they need.

How do you know when you're ready to move on after tragedy?

Cupid's Advice:

Every person deals with pain and grief differently. It can be difficult to know when you are truly ready to move forward, but Cupid has some advice for a wounded heart:

1. Take it slow: When it comes to heartbreak and tragedy together, that combination can lead to destructive behavior because you may feel like you have lost all control. Be cautious and take the time you need to process.

3. Be honest: When you do get lucky and find someone new, make sure you are honest and open about your past. The tragedy is in your past but that doesn't mean it won't come into play in the future. Be good to your heart and to your new potential partner by putting it all on the table when it feels right to do so.
